SOVIET ART

APRIL 1935

FOREWORD

Among the primal artistic forces of the modern world has been the genius of the Russian people. First and most strongly felt in literature and the theatre, it has also fructified and renewed music and the ballet. Today we have an opportunity of seeing, almost for the first time, the current effort of Soviet Russia in painting and graphic art. The world is eager to learn how art and culture may fare under a new form of social and economic organization. This exhibition, assembled in Soviet Russia on our invitation, by the Society for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries (VOKS), and fostered by the American Russian Institute, will go far to answer this question. The art it reveals is not of abstraction, but one of concrete relation to the life of a vast people at work and at play. The Pennsylvania Museum of Art is proud to have been a prime mover in bringing it before the Western world.
